Irish Writers Centre Novel Fair 2024

The Novel Fair is an annual competition initiated by the Irish Writers Centre (IWC). Described by The Irish Times as “A Dragons Cave for writers”, each year the Fair aims to introduce up-and-coming writers to top publishers and literary agents.

The Prize

The twelve winners will have the opportunity to present the summary of their novel directly to industry professionals. Leading publishers and agents will be invited by the IWC to meet these writers in person or through a series of online meetings. To get fully prepared for the meeting with publishers and agents, the winners will receive a place in a workshop on “How to Promote Your Novel”, two weeks in advance. Also, applicants who are longlisted (初选) but do not make it to the shortlist of twelve will have their works evaluated and criticized by the judging panel.

How to Enter

- Entry fee for application is £55 (Members of IWC can enter for a discounted fee of £45).
- This competition only accepts manuscripts (原稿) for novels.
- Applicants are required to send a summary within 300 words and up to five chapters of their novel, which should be 10,000 words (+/–10%).
- Manuscripts should be submitted online.
- There is a limit of one entry per applicant.

Entries are welcome from anywhere in the world. Before entering the competition, please ensure that you have read the Novel Fair Terms & Conditions 2024 very carefully as the Fair is open to only novelists who have never published work previously. If you have any questions about the application process, please email novelfair@irishwriterscentre.ie.

75-year-old hip-hop (街舞) grandma Stephanie Walsh has gained worldwide attention with her intense dance moves and incredible energy. Better known as "Ms. Stephanie" online, Walsh has been featured on social media accounts with some videos drawing more than 11 million people to watch.

Walsh believes the videos gained popularity because she is 75. "It's because I'm a senior," said Walsh. "You don't usually see someone my age doing hip-hop and moving like that." But actually, it's more than that. Just as her profile claims, Walsh's videos are "inspiring the world to dance like no one is watching."

"Dance isn't just your body, it's what you're feeling inside about the dance and it's what comes out here in your face," Walsh said. "What I want to put through my movement is how much fun it is and how much joy it gives you."

From a young age, Walsh loved to dance but her family didn't have the money for classes. When she was nearly 30, she got her daughter ballet lessons, which her daughter hated. So, she took her daughter out and started classes herself right away.

Walsh believes her lifelong passion for dance is what motivates her today. "Everybody has to have a passion in their life," she said. "It's like that saying, 'A life without passion is a life half lived.' I believe that."

Walsh dances for fun and fitness, but also for therapy (心理治疗). She struggled through countless hardships, and she has more than enough reasons to keep her down. But they don't. She turns to her faith, her friends and of course, dance, to shine as an inspiration to those around her.

Gilbert, one of Walsh's followers, says she inspires him every day. "She's a beautiful soul who teaches me that it doesn't matter about your age or your size. As long as you feel good, that's all that matters," says Gilbert. "I am truly thankful that Walsh is teaching me at the age of 32 to live my life full and stop being so scared."

24. What motivates Walsh to do hip-hop?
    A. Its great social benefit.
    B. Its growing popularity.
    C. Her enthusiasm for dance.
    D. Her hunger for reputation.
25. What contributes to her videos' popularity according to Walsh?
    A. Her advanced age.
    B. Her smooth moves.
    C. Her endless energy.
    D. Her confident claim.
26. What will Walsh's story probably inspire Gilbert to do?
    A. Be active in social media.
    B. Set a good example to others.
    C. Take full advantage of his talent.
    D. Adopt a positive approach to life.
27. Which is a suitable title for the text?
    A. Optimistic About Life: The Way to Survive
    B. Forever Young in Dance: An Inspiring Figure
    C. Embracing Social Media: The Key to Success
    D. Dancing with the Young: An Amazing Journey

C

A China plane struck a bird after taking off in Chengdu, Sichuan, and had to immediately return to the airport last October, and it wasn't the first accident between an aircraft and a bird last year.

In fact, more than 20,000 wildlife strikes with aircraft were reported worldwide in 2023 – the vast majority of those animals being birds. The strikes can also include run-ins with bats or creatures on the ground, such as deer or turtles. Expanding wildlife populations, increases in number of aircraft movements, and a trend toward faster and quieter aircraft all have contributed to the increase in wildlife strikes.

Bird strikes are a hazard not just to commercial airplanes, but to all sorts of aircraft. However, historical data shows that damage is reported in a small percentage of incidents. Last year, 95% of the global strikes involved some kind of damage – and only 5% of those caused "substantial" damage.

Some of the most disturbing types of strikes can happen when one or more birds go into a plane's engine, which might cause a lot of damage to the aircraft. The pilot would need to return to the airport or find a safe place to land.

In last October's China plane incident, the Beijing-bound flight was able to land normally in Chengdu after taking into account what the airline described as security concerns. Senior captain Chen Jianguo said pilots are trained on how to respond if they have a bird strike in flight. The pilot in this case did exactly what he was trained to do.

"There are lots of things that are being used by airports to try to manage the habitat and birds around the airport," said Chen Jianguo. Airports need to manage bird habitats to reduce or get rid of trees and plants that shelter birds, or address wetlands that can attract birds. Collecting data on what kinds of birds are involved in strikes is equally important so the risks can better be managed. Many airports also use audible signals to scare birds away, such as the sounds of fireworks.

28. What is a cause of the increase in wildlife strikes?

A. The poorly designed aircraft.

B. The growing number of birds.

C. The destruction of wildlife habitats.

D. The absence of environmental awareness.

29. What does the underlined word in Paragraph 3 probably mean?

A. Danger. B. Delay. C. Accident. D. Reminder.

30. What does the historical data tell us about bird strikes?

A. They are a rare occurrence.

B. They usually damage engines.

C. Most of them cause slight damage.

D. Most of them involve one single bird.

31. What does the last paragraph mainly talk about?

A. Ways to study bird behavior.

B. Measures to drive birds away.

C. Efforts to restore bird habitat.

D. Attempts to take care of birds.

D

Suppose you come across two doctors. One is handsome while the other looks plain. Who would you trust with your surgery? Most people would probably want to get treated by the handsome one. And most people are likely to be wrong about that.

When you look at the sun, you sometimes see it clearly. But sometimes you'll see it shining way bigger than its actual shape. That circle of light called a halo makes it look bigger. This effect, known as the halo effect, also happens when a person, product, or company shines like the sun. Then we don't see them clearly and associate all sorts of unrelated qualities to them.

The halo effect was once studied by the psychologist Edward Thorndike, who asked flight commanders to evaluate their pilots in various distinct aspects such as physical appearance, intelligence, and leadership. He found that the pilots who got high scores for their physical appearance, also got rated high on intelligence and leadership skills – a link that seemed wrong. It appears that the commanders were unable to evaluate specific qualities independently of others. They thought of their pilots in broad terms, either "good" or "bad", and allowed this general feeling to influence the specific qualities they credited to their pilots. Some pilots profited from their halo.

The halo effect also explains why some teachers give better-looking students higher grades. One study looked at the grades of 4,500 pupils, who were sorted by volunteers into three groups: below-average, average, and above-average looking. The researchers then compared students' grades between classes taken in conventional classrooms with those taken online where there was no face-to-face interaction. The researchers found that students who were rated as good-looking earned significantly lower grades in online courses compared to conventional classrooms.

Since the physical appearance of good-looking people seems to naturally make them also appear intelligent, strong, and trustworthy, here is one good rule. If you meet with an accident and have to choose between two equally qualified doctors, ignore their halo and choose the less handsome one. He might have worked twice as hard to gain the same reputation and is likely better at his job.

32. What is the purpose of the second paragraph?
    A. To explore a natural wonder.
    B. To spread scientific knowledge.
    C. To explain a psychological tendency.
    D. To interpret social rules at the workplace.
33. How did the commanders tend to evaluate their pilots in Thorndike's study?
    A. In a general way.
    B. With common sense.
    C. From a specific aspect.
    D. By an objective criterion.
34. What does the 4500-pupil study find about better-looking students?
    A. They were fairly treated by their teachers.
    B. They were less attentive in online courses.
    C. They probably had natural learning abilities.
    D. They were overvalued in conventional classes.
35. What can be learned about the halo effect?
    A. It relieves appearance anxiety.
    B. It leads to inaccurate judgments.
    C. It causes trust crisis among people.
    D. It intensifies workplace competition.

第二节（满分 25 分）

阅读下面材料，根据其内容和所给段落开头语续写两段，使之构成一篇完整的短文。

As the afternoon sun bathed the local beach with its warm, golden rays, four-year-old William sat on the beach with a mix of expectation and confusion. His dad, Steven, sat by his side. They were waiting for William's friends to arrive and celebrate his long-awaited birthday party. William's wide eyes, filled with hope and happiness, stared at the shoreline, looking for familiar faces.

He kept asking his dad where everyone was, and Steven just told him "they're coming soon," trying to ease his son's growing impatience. But the longer they waited, the more hopeless William became. He was extremely disappointed when the two invited families called and said they couldn't make it to the celebration because of unexpected situations.

Steven watched his son, who had been eagerly expecting his special day for what seemed like ages. This year, William had been more aware than ever of his upcoming birthday, asking throughout the month when his birthday was, eagerly expecting a good time.

Feeling a sense of guilt for his son's disappointment, Steven decided to turn to social media for help. He posted a lovely picture of him and William on the beach. Their faces were filled with a mix of hope and disappointment. The sincere words with the picture read, "William would love some friends to play with on the beach. To celebrate his fourth birthday, he has Hot Wheels, sand toys, dinosaurs, and we have some snacks and drinks. Any and all welcome."

William's wish for companionship produced a strong response from the local people. They flooded the post with messages of support, birthday wishes, and offers to join the celebration. They were determined to make William's day special.

"Going there. See you soon," one warm-hearted local commented on the post, promising to bring her family along. The message aroused the same feeling from many others, who were quick to follow suit.

注意：

1. 续写词数应为 150 左右；
